ECSTASY...

The first thing you'll notice is, we're all over the far flung, marginally supervised grounds of the Home for Wayward Artistes with this latest collection of ill-advised illumination.

Herein are demoiselles of every vintage, disposition and degree of dishabille (Rich recently found a French-English dictionary in a dumpster...) half-clad heroines, vavoomy villainesses, vampiresses both famous and lesbian; cult film it girls and pulchritudinous penitents; mythical mamacitas, pert princesses and adorable alien abductees... "What have they gotten us into?," they seem to be asking, and you, from whom we hope to extract fifteen big ones, might be asking the same.

Full disclosure - and you've probably figured this out already if you've been to a previous F&L monster truck rally - we aren't exactly following the siren song of the Muses here (idea: scantily-clad Muses lol around eyeing each other with barely controlled lust!)

Aided and abetted by our imaginative coterie of art commissioning maniacs, Steve's singular talent for tinkering existing imagery into something entirely more delightful, and Rich's continued willingness to probe the depths of his toxic id, we're still trying, if you will, to shoehorn as many bounteous babes into as many B-fantasy scenarios as we can get away with.

Even fuller disclosure: many of these images have seen print before - but trust us: they're so much better here! (Not that you shouldn't seek out the original versions, because we'd enjoy that money as well.) Some of them have appeared in our Pocket Pal series - but not in the vibrant full color you'll find here! Others date back through, as Steve calls them, the misty Dr. Martin's stained curtains of time, to our earliest black & white books, where the reproduction was perhaps a bit wanting; here, Steve has carefully zapped them into an orgiastic feast for the eyeballs.

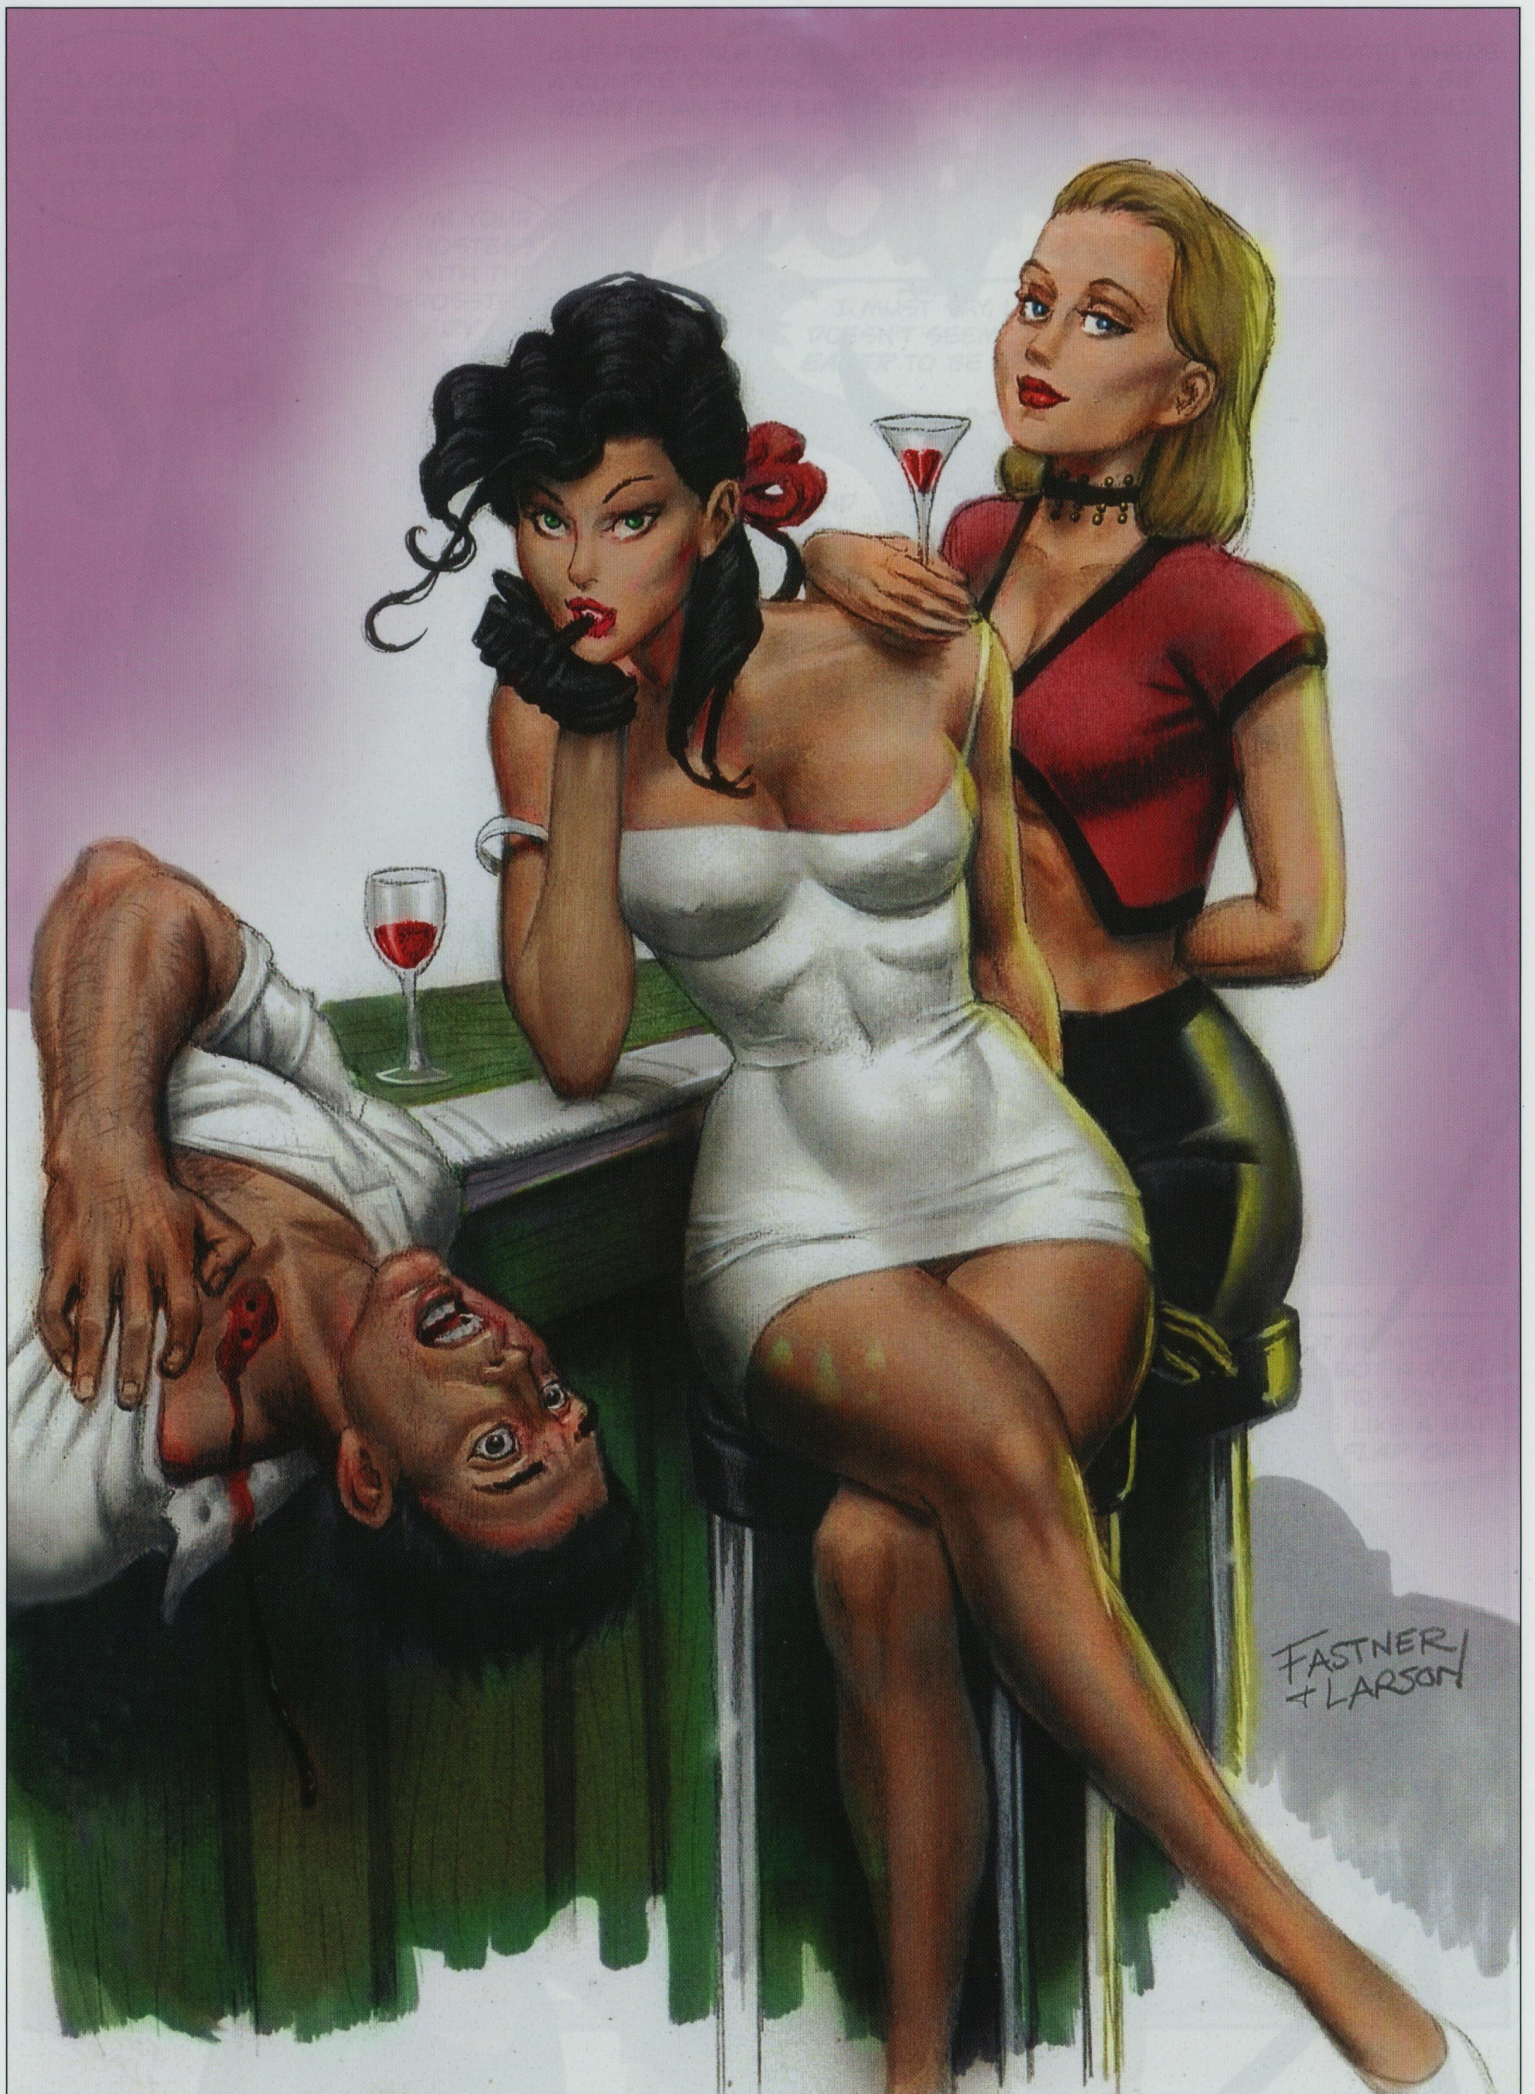

Fullest disclosure of all: there's an REM-inducing amount of new stuff here, including a six page story that ties this whole 48 page fever dream together. So, yes, F&L completists: you're kind of going to have to have this. Happy reading!
